Re: 209E-LA-245399, 09/06/2011

The victim's guardian was contacted through her attorney the improper release of protected health information was verified.

Interviews were conducted and documents and other medical records were subpoenaed. The investigation did not definitively reveal the source of the leak. However, it appeared that the leak may have been from a source other than the hospital such as the Department of Children and Family Services or the Los Angeles Sheriff's Department. Both agencies responded to a report filed by the hospital.

On 04/03/2008, the Los Angeles Times newspaper published an article alleging that a UCLA Hospital employee viewed the protected patient information of Farrah Fawcett without authorization and may have illegally disclosed that information to the media.

Interviews were conducted and documents, toll records and other information was obtained pursuant to subpoenas. Evidence showed that UCLA employee Lawanda Jackson was viewing the electronic medical records of numerous celebrity patients without authorization and selling the information contained in those records to a reporter, [REDACTED] at the National Enquirer.

On 04/09/2008, Lawanda Jackson was indicted on one count of violating U.S.C. 42 Ss 1320d-6(a)(2), b(3), and one count of U.S.C. 18 Ss 2(b). She was convicted of those charges on 12/01/2008. However, Jackson died prior to sentencing.

While reviewing documents provided by UCLA, evidence was obtained to substantiate HIPAA privacy act violations by UCLA former hospital employees [REDACTED]

Additional documents regarding possible HIPAA violations related to media outlets were received from Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. Sub-files were opened to maintain these documents. However, after review of the documents, the USAO declined to support further investigation and prosecution related to these allegations.
